TRANSLATOR'S FOREWORD

The Tibetan term mönlam (smon lam), here rendered as “invocation”, means to express a wish in order that it may come true. Literary compositions known as mönlam, very widespread in Tibetan Buddhism, are often recited by practitioners due to the power it is believed they possess.

The Invocation of Samantabhadra (Kun tu bzang po'i smon lam) belongs to the cycle of the Northern Treasures (byang gter) rediscovered by the great tertön Rigdzin Godemchen (1337-1409), and is part of a tantra called The All-penetrating State of Samantabhadra (Kun tu bzang po'i dgongs pa zang thal).

It is a powerful invocation expressing the principle of the original ground and how the Atibuddha and the beings of the six lokas arise due to its recognition or nonrecognition. Some lines have been repeated for the purpose of singing this invocation according to the melody that Chögyal Namkhai Norbu introduced in 2011.
